

ENBIS magazine

As reported in the March issue of ENBIS News, the council of ENBIS have arranged for the publication of a professionally produced magazine every two months. It will be included as part of Scientific Computing World, a magazine that already has circulation throughout Europe of 15 000 and an estimated readership of 80 000. Every member of ENBIS who wishes to receive this will be added to the mailing list of Scientific Computing World. There is no charge for this. You will receive Scientific Computing World, including the ENBIS magazine, every two months, absolutely free. But you must confirm that you want to receive it. See the panel on the right.

Scientific Computing World reports on and analyses the application of computing to science, technology and medicine, focusing on research, development, testing, and laboratory analysis (including QA/QC). The magazine carries news, comment, feature articles, product news, and is recognised for its authoritative software reviews, especially in the areas of maths/stats software.

The publishers of Scientific Computing World (SCW), Europa Science Ltd, acknowledge that statistical methods are also critical tools in research for science, business and industry so would like to include some extra pages for ENBIS. These pages will be clearly distinguished from the rest of the magazine in design but they will be subject to the same editorial control. The section will bear its own title such as ENBIS magazine.

The press date, every other month, is the third Friday of the month. Copy date (the day by which all contributions should be submitted) is three weeks before press date. Thus the first issue in which we can be included will go to press on 21 May for which the copy date will be 30 April.

As well as case studies, the ENBIS magazine can include: conference reports; workshop reports; local network reports; interest group reports; news of resources; calendar of events; letters; book announcements; news of people.

If you want to receive the magazine, you must look at your membership record on the website, verify and correct your postal address, and change the SCW field to 'Yes'.

We need contributions, especially articles of no more than 800 words on case studies.
